Wine tasting and Cassoulet dinner

Imagine sitting down at a table with six wine glasses arrayed in an arc before you. That was the situation when my husband Joe and I attended the cassoulet dinner and wine and cheese tasting at Maumee Wines. It was our job to identify first six white wines, then six red wines. We had to guess the grape and which three of six were French. We sat with Jerry and Karen and had a blast. The other three were better able to identify wines by grape or country, but everyone was having a good time. The cassoulet and the cheeses were delicious. We especially enjoyed the triple cream cheese. The conversation was also very entertaining. Before we sat down, we enjoyed a lively conversation with Sylvia in French. I knew Jerry from the advanced French class and Karen is in the beginner class. By the end, everyone seemed relaxed and friendly. We are looking forward to the Christmas dinner! Our bilingual cookbook

Looking for Christmas gifts? This might be a bright idea!

Brigitte Odenthal and her team have produced a fine example of Franco-American kitchen savvy. The attractive 111 page volume is bilingual throughout and includes detailed references. The student of French, who may struggle with terms in a French recipe, will find enlightenment here.

Copies are $18.95 at the Center, or a little more (shipping fee) if you want it by mail. For more details, see our website www.aftoledo.com (Dave Barnes)

Réunion annuelle 2009 de la Fédération à Chicago

Voici un extrait tiré du site du Consulat de France :

«Pendant les trois jours, du 22 au 25 Octobre, la Fédération a présenté des ateliers très importants au sujet des "best practices" entre les chapitres, et nous avons eu le plaisir d'accueillir Mme. Monique Saigal, auteur du livre, "Les Héroïnes Françaises" qui parle des femmes qui ont joué un rôle dans la Résistance. À la fin des ateliers, nous avons célébré "Le Jazz", et l'histoire d'amour de la France avec les grands musiciens de Jazz en Amérique, au Bistro Cyrano avec un très bon dîner en plus. L'Assemblée a été un grand succès.

Cubic Pétanque

Sète is a small city in the south of France. It is situated on Mt. St. Clair, almost an island on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. Because of this location on Mt. St. Clair, there are many steep streets and it is impossible for one to play pétanque in his neighborhood. There are some Sètois who are trying to address this problem. The solution? "Balls" shaped as cubes! Alain Mauran, president of the Society of Joueurs Frontignais, replaced the round balls with metal cubes that he made. The piglet cube was made of a small piece of wood.

The originators of this idea are Claude Combes, president of the Ski Club of Sète, and André Camélio, "member of nothing at all" according to him. They recounted that they were in the bar "Les Deux Rameurs" and discussed that it is impossible to entertain oneself with pétanque because of the steep streets. After a drink or two Claude and André conceived of the obvious solution!

The first match was played in the rue Rapide by four teams of friends. The "carréistes" adapted the rules of pétanque for the needs of the sloping field of battle. They decided that the players were able to bounce the cubes off the walls, doors, and the spectators on the condition of not injuring anyone or damaging anything. As onlookers, is it necessary that we wear leg guards?

The competitors reported that the team of the organizers and that of the "bars of Sète" were crowned champions. The Frontignais and the team "rest of the world" were able to content themselves with the title of vice-champions. And we know that it is always the losers that are coerced to buy a drink for the winners. One doesn't mess with this rule.
